Foreword

This is Terence Coventry's fourth one-man show at Gallery Pangolin and I have watched with great interest how his work has developed over the past sixteen years.

In the early days an old tractor shed served as his studio but the construction of a dedicated sculpture workshop has allowed Terence to invest in some serious metalworking equipment. A power hammer, a variety of welders, a sand blaster, the forge and a home-made steel sheet folder together with all manner of hand tools are now at his disposal.

His choice of material and those tools necessary for its manipulation necessarily dictate at least part of the look and feel of his sculpture, lending an architectural monumentality to even relatively small works, though they remain instantly identifiable. His characteristic language of faceted, cubistic forms is surprisingly adaptable; whether welded in steel, cast in silver, modelled in plaster or hammered out of sheet metal, it is always recognisable.

A full-time sculptor for many years, Terence now no longer feels the need to take an animal or bird as his starting point and instead takes inspiration from arrangements of pure form which he then works into his chosen subject. His passionate connection to birds and animals remains nonetheless, and the way in which he deftly transforms an assemblage of shapes into a familiar beast or body is all part of the magic of his work.
